Description
This game can only be played with an odd number of players. Half + one of the number of players are placed behind a chair in a circle. One of the chairs remains free. Whoever sits behind this chair must call a player to occupy the chair. Thus, the player without a partner has to peek at one of the players, but in secret, as the other players are on the lookout because they do not want to lose their partners. The players behind the chairs have their hands behind their backs. If they notice that someone is peeking at their partners, they must react quickly and hold them, before they have risen from their seats. The player without a partner must peek until one of the players manages to reach him. The partnerless player continues the game, trying to call another partner to him.
