Description

Players stand in a circle holding hands. The person who starts the round stands in the middle with a small object in his hand. He names a sender and a receiver, then gives the sender the object and turns his back to him. The sender sends the object either left or right, and the participants in the game are now responsible for sending it on without it being detected by the person in the middle. Once the object has been passed forward, so it is no longer with the sender, the person in the middle is allowed to turn around and watch for any move to discover the object. For this he has 2 tries: if he correctly names the person where the object is, they swap places. If she fails, the game continues. Players are allowed to pretend to hold the object to mislead the person in the middle.
